

the INNERSPACE connection

Harry Stamper, Merchandise Picker for the Walt Disney Distributing Company, operates his giant fork-lift remotely. He actually "rides" up three to four stories on the lift to pick specified cartons off the shelves for distribution to over 135 shops on site.

The stamp on the bottom of the porcelain figurine reads Hand Crafted in Italy. But it is sitting on a shelf in a Magic Kingdom shop at Walt Disney World, Florida.

A tired guest orders a cup of coffee "to go" at a snack shop in the Village, and is handed a white styrofoam cup filled with the steaming liquid. He never notices that it was manufactured in Ft. Worth, Texas.

A secretary touches the wrong key on her typewriter, ending her letter with Sincerely yourx. So she reaches for a bottle of white liquid opaque to correct the mistake, never seeing the Hayward, California address of the manufacturer.

When a guest reaches for a Mickey Mouse tee-shirt, or an employee reaches for an envelop containing a paycheck, little thought is given to the phenomenon that the item they are grasping is physically here, is at this very moment in their hand in Central Florida in Walt Disney World. It is just taken for granted; if the shirt is here, then it is here. Period.

But where did it come from? And even more puzzling, if it was manufactured way over there . . . how did it get here?

The answer is one seldom thought about by most, and is best answered by tracing a complicated journey across the nation, even across the world. But the final step can be described as our Disney Interspace Connection . . . otherwise known as the Distribution Department.

"That's sure one way to describe what our department does," Armand Fiola, Superintendent of General Supply and Facilities Support, told us. "We receive, store, and distribute the ten thousand-and-one various items it takes to not only operate Walt Disney World, but provide merchandise for our guests to purchase. We are constantly challenged with how to utilize our innerspace to store as much as possible . . . I guess you could say that we are in the innerspace business."

And what a business it is! Armand took us on a tour of the six warehouse and distribution points which service Walt Disney World, explaining as we went how each is tied to the daily functions here.

SPECIAL BICENTENNIAL SOUVENIRS INCLUDED IN THIS ISSUE

With our nation's 200th birthday yet another page out of the history books, the EYES & EARS staff has included two mementos from last month's celebrations. Inside this issue is a complimentary songbook we passed out to guests attending one of our four-day spectacles, and our centerfold this week is an original painting which was a concept of Bob Jani, Vice-President of Entertainment Division for Disneyland/Walt Disney World, depicting the very height of our Fourth of July spectacular in New York Harbor. We hope that you will enjoy receiving them.

Standing in the middle of DC-1 (an acronym for Distribution Center Number One), we began to realize that the million separate items we take for granted here; from the porcelain figurines in the shops to coffee cups in our restaurants to typing correction liquid to tee-shirts to paycheck envelopes to toilet paper and paper towels in our restrooms; didn't just happen, they were made to happen through the combined efforts of the 200 or so Distribution Department cast members and sophisticated computer technology.

DC-1 is a giant warehouse, located in the North Service Area near the Central Foods Facility. At just about any point in time, the front is a bee hive of activity, with perhaps six or more semi-trailers backed up to its loading dock, bearing license tags from across the country. Inside are row after row of huge metal shelves, with cartons and boxes stacked three stories high. And between the rows are electric fork-lifts, scurrying about "picking" a box down here and putting one up there.

Several times a day, a specially designed tram departs DC-1 for the basement, loaded down with supplies for the shops. Whitey Ragan is one of our fork-lift operators.

"We have six major distribution centers servicing Walt Disney World. DC-1 houses all of our general supply items, the types that are not for resale. DC-2 is located at Florida Center in South Orlando. We keep much of our wholesale items stored there. DC-3 is the Shader Warehouse in North Orlando where we put many items for long-term storage. I guess you could call it Disney's attic. DC-6 is our main retail merchandising warehouse located in the Administration Area, the one with WDDC painted on its side. DC-A is a maintenance stockroom in the basement under Hall of Presidents, and DC-B supplies parts for the Central Facilities Shops, from its location just across from DC-1." Armand went on to show us each.

Joe Harris can usually be found in DC-A, under Hall of Presidents. Their warehouse stocks electronic supplies for the Audio and Electronic Departments, as well as Area Maintenance personnel. Seen here, Joe is getting a printed circuit board for one of the Audio-Animatronic systems.

And it was a mind-boggling experience. All of the warehouses looked alike; row-after-row and shelf-after-shelf of brown cartons, all stacked three and four stories high on wooded pallets. How in the world (no pun intended) did the warehousemen know where to go for a box of scotch tape, for instance, we asked? "It's a big cycle actually," Armand explained. "Very basically, it works like this . . . we have a need for scotch tape, so the Purchasing Department orders it. It arrives by truck to the proper warehouse, in this case DC-1, where it is unloaded. The Receiving Department checks it in and validates the necessary paperwork. The box of tape is then entered into a computer system by Data Processing and the computer gives it an exact location, which is printed on the box's side. It is then moved by fork-lift to that exact location. Later, a need for scotch tape may develop in a certain office. So they fill out a requisition for tape which is sent to Data Processing. The computer gives us a list of needed items, stating their exact location, how many to pick, where to ship them, and who to charge the items to. Our warehousemen then physically pick a carton of tape out and place it on a pallet addressed to that particular office. Later that day, the tape is carried to the office."

Betty Kaschalk, Material Control Clerk, is one of six employees at the DC-6 (WDDC) Receiving Office. Their full-time job is just to keep track of a literal mountain of paperwork, including invoices, computer readouts, and receipts.

At the WDDC (Walt Disney Distributing Company) warehouse in the Administration Area, we met Homer Marshall, Superintendent of the Distribution Department - Merchandise Operations. He showed us DC-6, our largest warehouse. During our visit, we counted 19 semi-trailers at the dock, six from overseas alone! Here, all of the merchandise for over 135 shops located in the Magic Kingdom, Lake Buena Vista, and our resorts is received, accounted for, and stored prior to stocking our shops. "Before storing them, we open every package and place a price sticker on each item," Homer pointed out. This alleviates the need to mark items in the stores.

Looking over Purchasing Orders are (l-r) Armand Fiola, Superintendent of General Supply Distribution and Facilities Support; Dick Rosen, Manager of the Distribution Department; and Homer Marshall, Superintendent of Distribution Department - Merchandise Operations.

Armand went on to say that the warehousemen pick the items during the day and distribute them in the tunnels at night. This insures our stores are fully stocked every morning.

All together, the Distribution Department is charged with over 275,000 square feet of storage to keep Walt Disney World supplied with the items we need to operate. A big job they have made possible through the blending of human resources and computer technology.

BOB MATHEISON RECOGNIZED BY SECRET SERVICE

Last Wednesday, Bob Matheison, Vice-President of Operations Division, was recognized with the highest award of the United States Secret Service; the Director's Honor Award. In a ceremony conducted here at Walt Disney World, Resident Agent Bob Connelly presented Bob with a plaque and read the following letter from H.S. Knight, Director of the agency:

"On behalf of the United States Secret Service, I wish to thank you for the invaluable assistance and cooperation you have continuously provided our agency since the opening of Walt Disney World in 1971.

"Your support and understanding of both our protective and investigative responsibilities have greatly assisted us in the performance of our duties. Special Agent In Charge Forrest Guthrie of Jacksonville, and Resident Agent Bob Connelly of Orlando, have advised me that during this five-year period, 22 persons have been arrested and charged with passing counterfeit currency at Walt Disney World. This has resulted in a total seizure of over $600,000 in counterfeit notes. In addition, four of the arrests have led to complete plant seizures in other districts.

"In connection with our protective responsibilities, I understand that you have been actively involved in assisting us with more than 18 visits of our protectees to Walt Disney World, and that you extended every possible courtesy to the visiting dignitaries, as well as the agents assigned to their security details. Further, the professional manner reflected by the Walt Disney World security team, while assisting the Secret Service, reflects great credit upon your leadership and capabilities.

"In recognition, I wish to present to you the highest award of the United States Secret Service - the Director's Honor Award. Since I cannot personally present the Award, I have asked Resident Agent Bob Connelly to represent me in the presentation, and to convey the esteem in which you are held by the United States Secret Service."

After the presentation, Bob pointed out that he accepted the award on behalf of every cast member at Walt Disney World, "from the individual ticket sellers who first noticed the counterfeit bills to the investigators who followed the passers." Bob explained to EYES & EARS that the real credit goes to employees like Greg Weeks and all of his Security hosts and hostesses; to Tom Garrison and Judy Perry of Guest Relations and their many hosts and hostesses; everyone in Tickets, Food and Merchandising for spotting the counterfeits; and lastly, all of the operating employees who have assisted when special guests and dignitaries are here.

In short, Walt Disney World received the Secret Service's highest award for the efforts put forth by every cast member here!

After attending two 3-hour sessions, participants who successfully complete the course will receive their certification from the American Heart Association.

The two 3-day sessions will be:

- Monday and Wednesday, 9 am to 12 noon
- Tuesday and Thursday, 6 pm to 9 pm

The sessions will be held every week through December, with the first beginning the middle of this month . . . Monday/Wednesday starting August 16 and Tuesday/Thursday on August 17.

Cast members who wish to learn this life-saving technique at no cost must register by calling the Disney University, extension 4744. Class openings are limited to 15 students each. You must attend both sessions and pass a CPR skills test to be certified by the American Heart Association.

Rotagilla offers several shows; the best in ragtime, folkrock, and 50's hits . . . all done in Rotagilla style with banjos, guitars, mandolins, steel guitars, kazoos, fiddles, trombones, and even an electric washtub! All combined to create a rich, rollicking sound you're sure not to forget too soon!

Prior to their engagement at Walt Disney World, Rotagilla has been playing to college and nightclub audiences across the South, and this week are in Los Angeles taping "The Midnight Special" for the Fall!

Between Rotagilla's shows, the Lee Thomas Disco will provide continuous boogie sounds for your dancing pleasure. And there will be door prizes galore! The grand prize will be a weekend for two at the Colony Beach and Tennis Resort at Longboat Key, Sarasota.

Attention divisions . . . UNITE! Special awards will be presented to the division which has the highest number of employees attending SHINDIG '76, so divisions . . . get your people together!

nance 20-12, Admissions took another close win over Contemporary Services 5-3, and Tickets out-drove Golf Resort 19-14.

Wednesday scores showed LBV Communities over Security 7-0, and Theme Park Maintenance handed Custodial their first defeat of the season with an impressive 12-6 victory. Custodial then bounced back in a make-up game to hand the Superbal-lers their first defeat of the 2nd half season by a 6-4 final score.

Thursday night action saw Resorts rallying with three runs in the bottom of the last inning to overcome Sir Edwards 9-8, Liberty Square scored two in the top of the first extra inning to win over a rough and tough Ad/Lib Complex, the Fubars just outlasted a gritty Bordens team who were behind by 12-3 to end the game in a final 12-10 score, and Admissions in a play-off game with Marketing came out on top 14-5.

Finally, on Friday night, Theme Park Maintenance and Sir Edwards met in a game to decide a "wild-card" entry into our 2nd half tournament, and in eight well played innings, the Maintenance gang came out on top with a 6-5 win.
